The former Sopranos actress, 60, has lost 35 lbs. and written the self-help book To the Fullest

What inspired your weight loss?

I watched both my parents die at the same time I went through menopause. After that, I decided I wanted to live a more healthy life.

Is it hard to avoid temptations?

I'm eating clean now, so I'll look at a bag of licorice and say, "What are you going to do for me? Nothing."

Any healthy foods you love now that you didn't eat before?

Quinoa! I use it in everything—breakfast, lunch and dinner.

'People think it must be fun to eat what you want—and it is, for the first day. Day two, when you're already on your second cheeseburger and fries with a chocolate shake by 11 a.m., not so much.'

'So all of you who take it upon yourselves to trash our marriage...go ahead and keep doing it, cause it only makes us stronger.'

Though I admire Angelina Jolie's bravery, each time I read about her decision to have surgery, I am left wondering about the other half of the story. How did she go about getting these types of tests and elective surgeries? People UPDATE

ACCUSED Chris Lee (above), 25, pleaded not guilty to charges of first-degree murder of Erin Corwin (left).

Erin Corwin Details

Erin Corwin, the wife of a U.S. Marine whom we wrote about in our Aug. 11, 2014, issue, expected a proposal from her alleged lover before she disappeared last June and was discovered nearly two months later at the bottom of a mine shaft near Joshua Tree National Park in California. At a pretrial hearing on April 2 for Chris Lee, her accused killer, prosecutors stated Corwin thought Lee was taking her to the desert to propose. "It apparently takes two hours just to get there," she texted a friend. "The location is only half the surprise." An autopsy revealed she was strangled with a homemade garrote, which was found next to her body, but it could not confirm whether Corwin was pregnant, because her body had decomposed.

Red Carpet 'It' Bag

HOLLYWOOD HAS FALLEN FOR BRITISH ACCESSORIES DESIGNER ANYA HINDMARCH'S WHIMSICAL CLUTCH

"Anya takes everyday objects and reimagines them as witty pieces," says stylist Rebecca Corbin-Murray, who works with Lily James. This time Hindmarch's inspiration was a crinkled "crisp packet," the U.K. vernacular for a bag of potato chips. But there's a reason the designer's wearable art costs so much more than the salty snack: The sculptural outer layer is hand-polished metal—just try crumpling that up!

ROBERT PATTINSON & FKA TWIGS

WEDDING (AND BABY?) PLANS!

BY JEFF NELSON

ROBERT PATTINSON IS READY FOR MARRIAGE—and maybe for the pitter-patter of little Pattinsons. The Twilight star recently popped the question to his girlfriend of six months, fellow Brit and singer FKA twigs, and multiple sources confirm to PEOPLE: She said yes! “They get each other,” says a Pattinson insider. “Everyone is really glad he’s found someone who makes him so happy.”

Another source close to Pattinson adds that the couple are thinking of a late-summer ceremony, though the date is “not definite.” While the actor’s parents “would really like a church wedding,” twigs “wants something quite informal, like a pub wedding.” The Gloucestershire native, born Tahliah Barnett, is keen to start a family. “She really wants kids,” the source says. →

Taylor Swift & Calvin Harris

First spotted kissing and dancing at a March 26 Kenny Chesney concert in Nashville, Swift, 25, and the deejay, 31, "seem to be getting more serious," says a source. On April 2 they went to L.A.'s Troubadour to see her pals HAIM perform. Says an onlooker: "He had an arm around her and they looked very happy."

Jennifer Lawrence & Chris Martin

The Oscar winner, 24, and the Coldplay rocker, 38, are still going strong. After Martin returned from spring break in Mexico with his "consciously uncoupled" wife, Gwyneth Paltrow, and their kids, he spent Easter weekend in N.Y.C. with Lawrence, dining at Tavern on the Green and strolling in Central Park. Says a source: "They enjoy each other."

Gwyneth Paltrow & Brad Falchuk

She's moved on too! Martin's ex, 42, and the Glee co-creator, 44, took their romance more public at Robert Downey Jr.'s party (see page 24). Their discreet relationship "is evolving," says an insider.

The new couple (inset, on April 2) were "flirty" together during their recent date night.

ROBERT DOWNEY JR.'S A-LIST BIRTHDAY BASH

Robert Downey Jr.'s 50th-birthday party was starrier than most awards shows. The guest list included Jennifer Aniston and Justin Theroux, Reese Witherspoon, Katie Holmes, Gwen Stefani and Gavin Rossdale, and Orlando Bloom (and Downey's wife, Susan, left). Hollywood's heavy hitters showed up to celebrate the Avengers: Age of Ultron actor at the April 4 bash at Santa Monica's Barker Hangar event space. "It was the best party. Star-studded, of course, but it felt very intimate," a source tells PEOPLE of the soiree. "Everyone seemed friendly and hugged each other left and right." —JEFF NELSON

In American Odyssey (Sundays, 10 p.m. on NBC) you play a former U.S. attorney turned litigator. How did you prep for the role?

I actually studied pre-law in college before I switched to acting, so doing the courtroom drama was fun!

You just got engaged to your fiancée, actress Jaimie Alexander. How did you pop the question?

I had a plane fly by the top of the Empire State Building with a banner that said, "Hope you say yes." When she read it, I got down on one knee. It was very romantic.

How did you pick her ring? We're having it made. I wanted her to be involved, because it's something that she's going to have for a long time.

DOUBLE TALK

WITH
LUKE BRYAN
& BLAKE SHELTON

THE TRASH-TALKING
PALS HOST THE 50TH ANNUAL ACADEMY OF
COUNTRY MUSIC AWARDS

This is your third time cohosting the show. What do you have planned?

Luke: It'll be an exciting night with a lot of big names. We'll pay homage to many of the artists who paved the way for us.

Blake: Yeah, for the 50th anniversary it's a bigger deal than just us telling jokes.

Any nerves? How do you calm them?

Luke: Blake and I have an area backstage where we keep some spirits. Before the show, we'll take a shot or two.

Blake: And then we'll take another shot of something after the show too!

Is there anyone you won't joke about?

Luke: Jason Aldean is so sensitive. If I tell jokes about him, he calls me up and cries.

Blake: And if you joke about Taylor Swift, her fans get really pissed off at you!

What'll be the best joke of the night?

Luke: When Blake and I perform.

Blake: Maybe we'll even make out on the stage. It'll go viral, in more ways than one.

Luke: You mean virus. There's no telling what I'd catch from you.

You're close friends. What's the best thing about each other?

Blake: The best thing is Luke's smile, but he loses his charm when he starts to talk!

Luke: The best thing about Blake is that at different points of his life, his butt has been bigger than his belly. At other times his belly is bigger than his butt.

Ouch! If that's the best thing, then what's the worst thing?

Blake: His personality. Fame lets you be who you really are, and that's not a good thing with Luke.

Luke: The worst thing about Blake is that he refuses to dye the sides of his hair.

Blake: I love you, Luke.

Luke: I love you, Blake.

Blake: Aw, shut up.

The Shocking Death of a Celeb Doc

Dermatologist-to-the-stars Fredric Brandt was distraught over comparisons to a character in Tina Fey's new series

Fredric Brandt, the famed dermatologist who counted Madonna, Kelly Ripa and model Stephanie Seymour among his patients, was found dead in his Coconut Grove, Fla., home on April 5. He was 65. Miami police said the death appeared to be a suicide, though, as of press time, the medical examiner had yet to issue an official ruling. A source tells PEOPLE that Brandt—a pioneer in the world of Botox and fillers and the man behind the Dr. Brandt Skincare line—was "hurt" over comparisons to a character on Tina Fey's Netflix series Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt. The character, played by Martin Short, is named Dr. Grant (pronounced Franff) and is reportedly modeled on the dermatologist. Brandt's publicist Jacquie Tractenberg confirms that the doctor, who was suffering from depression, was upset by the show's portrayal. "It wasn't the only thing troubling him; it was just one factor," she says. "He was the nicest, kindest man. And they made fun of him." Reps for Fey, Short and Netflix did not respond to requests for comment. "Dr. Brandt was a true gentleman, an innovator and a friend," Ripa told PEOPLE in a statement. "His loss will be felt for years to come."

Clarkson is unfazed by critics like Wallace (inset).

Kelly Clarkson Gets an Apology

Fox News host Chris Wallace apologized after saying Kelly Clarkson should “stay off the deep-dish pizza” during an April 3 radio chat. (“I admire her remarkable talent,” he said in a statement.) But Clarkson—who gave birth to daughter River Rose last June—isn’t concerned with the attention on her weight. “We are who we are,” she recently told Ellen DeGeneres. “Whatever size.”

in 2013. ● New Jersey’s Sen. Robert Menendez was indicted on April 1 for allegedly promoting the interests of friend and Democratic donor Dr. Salomon Melgen in exchange for gifts. Menendez has been charged on 14 counts, including conspiracy to commit bribery and honest services fraud.

DEATHS

Sarah Brady, widow of former presidential press secretary and antigun activist Jim Brady, died on April 3. She was 73. Former President Bill Clinton and former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton released a statement saying, “She transformed tragedy into a courageous campaign, and because of her work and her remarkable life, American families are safer today.” ● Cynthia Lennon, the first wife of John Lennon—and mother to Julian Lennon—died at her home in Mallorca, Spain, on April 1 at the age of 75. She had been battling cancer. ● Pet Rock inventor Gary Dahl died on March 23 at age 78 from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease in Jacksonville, Ore.

PERSONAL STORIES ABOUT GIVING BACK

Luke Perry

The actor, 48, joined forces with Fight Colorectal Cancer to honor his friends

I lost a friend this year to colon cancer, and she had two small children. And my oldest friend Chad Schrack’s wife is a survivor of the disease.

He asked me to help him, so I’m helping. It’s about raising awareness. I got involved with the Fight Colorectal Cancer “One Million Strong” campaign because I want people to be proactive about their health, to get information and go out there and get colonoscopies. Don’t worry about the stigma of it. Once I found out the numbers about this cancer—how detectable it is, and how lethal it is if you don’t detect it—it boggled my mind. I think if you gave people a choice of having a colonoscopy or having to have a tumor cut out of them, they would much rather have the colonoscopy. It needs to be put in those simple terms. We need to get everyone talking about it.

A DOZEN COOL THINGS TO SEE, HEAR, READ AND DOWNLOAD THIS WEEK

Daenerys (Emilia Clarke) has fires to put out—and they aren't caused by her dragons.

No. 1 Game of Thrones

The drums of war grow louder in the Seven Kingdoms. And winter? Still in the forecast

TV FANTASY The kingdoms in the densely plotted HBO series are littered with butchered royals—so when will the contest for the Iron Throne finally trigger an exciting world war? (Imagine if God had pushed “pause” after the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand.) Season 5 suggests, at last, that the main forces will be: (1) Daenerys Targaryen allied with Tyrion

Lannister, exiled after killing Pa on the toilet. (2) Stannis (Stephen Dillane, who deserves praise for his fine-grained subtlety)—and Jon Snow? (3) Queen Regent Cersei and whoever can stomach her. The mind at times tires of absorbing so much invented detail—why is a rebel group called Sons of the Harpy? Why not something easy, like the Bad Tizzles?—but Game is in great shape. (HBO, April 12, 9 p.m.)

No. 2 TV COMEDY Billy Crystal is in good form here—something like Larry David without so much of the agita of daily living. He’s a well-situated, very successful comedian (named Billy Crystal) paired up in a skit show with an edgy, self-important younger comedian played by (and named) Josh Gad. What’s inherently off in this setup is Gad/Gad. He’s a funny performer, but he’s not Russell Brand—he’s not even Uncle Leo from Seinfeld. And the “skits” we see aren’t much. But you should never underestimate Crystal’s way with a scene or a line. Self-effacing but pointed, he basically emcees the whole show. The one who’s flat-out funniest, though, may be Stephnie Weir as the duo’s neurotic producer. In an acting exercise with Gad, she starts off telling him, “Your grandma died,” then piles on detail after detail until she concludes: “Your bubbe exploded.” (FX, Thursdays, 10 p.m.)

Billy Crystal and Josh Gad play costars who aren’t quite in step.

Jackie (Edie Falco) has become her own state of emergency.

No. 3 TV COMEDY-DRAMA Edie Falco’s series about a nurse addicted to painkillers starts its final season with Jackie Peyton teetering once more on disaster. In retrospect, the show’s greatest strength, apart from the tacit pride in Falco’s refusal to ask for our pity, was the performances of Anna Deavere Smith, formidable and funny as supervisor Gloria Akalitis, and Merritt Wever as Zoey, a nurse who hopes for the best and, unlike Jackie, will probably never experience the worst. COMEDY A new season finds Selina Meyer (Louis-Dreyfus) elevated to President, but without an election, mandate or clue. She moves the Middle East peace process forward, but what really worries her are polls showing a national allergic reaction to the First Daughter. The zingy dialogue captures both the pathetic disingenuousness of policy phrasemaking (children are called “little human startups”) and the spitting anger that comes with political embarrassment. Selina, turning on an invaluable assistant, tells him: “You have suckered onto me like some sort of a car-window Garfield!” (HBO, April 12, 10:30 p.m.)

The life of her own or any other party: Julia Louis-Dreyfus as Madam President.

COMEDY After the brainy movie Interstellar, it's a relief when sci-fi embraces a total intellectual void. Created by Paul Feig (Bridesmaids), this is about the intergalactic travails of Capt. Stewart Lipinski (Karan Soni). His second-in-command is his resentful sister. Ranked below her is his former babysitter. The mission goes haywire, as will happen when the only food on board is fudge. This isn't a parody—space-opera conventions are Teflon—but a reminder that wherever you go, some dummy is along for the ride. (Available for streaming April 14)

A grammarian's unstuffy memoir, an Americanized royal romp and a modern reinvention of an Austen classic EDITED BY KIM HUBBARD

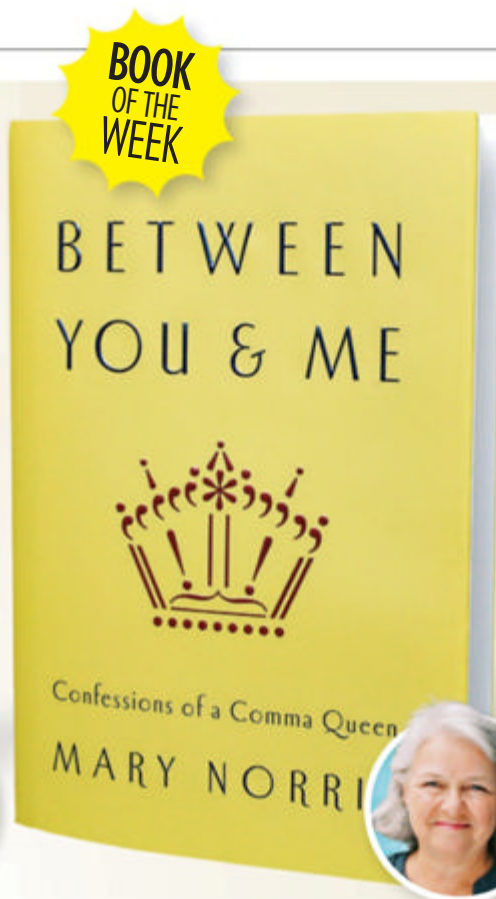

Heather Cocks and Jessica Morgan
The Royal We

NOVEL The characters should all be familiar: the heir to the British throne, his mischievous younger brother, his granny and the pretty commoner he meets in college. But in this version by bloggers Cocks and Morgan (a.k.a. the Fug Girls), the girl is American. Nick and Bex's love story is so fun and dishy, you'll hope for a sequel—with royal babies.

Alexander McCall Smith
Emma: A Modern Retelling

NOVEL McCall Smith brings all the wit and deft characterization of his No. 1 Ladies' Detective Agency series to this reimagining of Jane Austen's classic. Now a modern university grad, Emma is still the spoiled yet irrepressible girl whose meddling backfires; the lessons and pleasures of her tale are timeless.

Between You & Me

MEMOIR Fun and grammar are two words that don't often appear in the same sentence, but Norris, who's spent the past three decades working for The New Yorker's copy department, has an enthusiasm for the proper use of language that's contagious. Her memoir is so engaging, in fact, that it's easy to forget you're learning things. Advice on the perfect pencil (the Blackwing), why there's a hyphen in Moby-Dick—it all goes down easy. And you'll never say "between you and I" again.

THRILLER Billionaire hermits with secret lairs get a bad rap. Still, computer coder Caleb (Domhnall Gleeson) might have reason to be wary when his boss, digital genius Nathan (Oscar Isaac), invites him to his high-tech bunker. Nathan is working on an artificial intelligence called Ava (Alicia Vikander), and he needs Caleb to test her out. It's hard for Caleb to focus, though: Nathan is a drunk, the power in the hide-out keeps failing, and the pretty robot seems afraid of her maker. Isaac plays it cagey, while Vikander and Gleeson deliver a charm that plays off the film's twisted circuitry. (April 10, R)

No. 9 Reba, Love Somebody

The country queen continues to rule

MUSIC COUNTRY Reba's 27th studio album has a little something for everyone. There are both classic country ballads ("She Got Drunk Last Night," about a woman broken by loneliness) and modern country party anthems (the single "Going Out Like That," about a woman declaring herself unbreakable). But Reba seems most at home with the songs that fall comfortably somewhere in the middle of those extremes. Her brassy tone shines on the sassy "Until They Don't Love You," her storytelling skills deliver in the quietly emotional "Love Land," and her raspy vocals blend beautifully with those of her pal Jennifer Nettles on "Enough." That song ends with Reba expressing the wish that "I still was enough." Well, Reba, you are—and then some. (April 14)

Meet the men who shaped rock gods the Who

MOVIE DOCUMENTARY Working-class Chris Stamp and posh Kit Lambert thought they'd take over mid-'60s London by making movies. By some brilliant accident, they did it by managing the Who. Lacking cash and experience but brimming with brass and gall, the duo turned the rough-hewn band into rock legends. Naturally, it all fell apart. Interviews with Roger Daltrey and Pete Townshend are refreshingly revealing, as is footage of Lambert, who died in 1981. But Stamp adds the narrative snap: A natural raconteur, he dishes about rock, art and the magical youthquake that was. What fun it is to hear him talking 'bout his generation. (April 3, R)

"I'd love to be able to do music for as long as I want to," says Brooks (in Nashville on March 10). "That would be a sweet dream."

GARTH BROOKS WHY I WALKED AWAY

In the midst of his first tour in 14 years, the country superstar opens up about trading the spotlight for the chance to stay home and raise his 3 daughters

By JULIE JORDAN

arth Brooks is trying to take his mind off the night ahead of him. Wearing a hoodie pulled over his head, the singer goes unrecognized as he tosses a football to a pal across the arena floor at the First Niagara Center in Buffalo. Concentrating on another perfect spiral, Brooks momentarily forgets the 19,000-strong crowd eagerly waiting outside for the doors to open for the first of the evening's two sold-out concerts. "You try and stay busy as much as you can before a show, because if you don't, you get uncontrollably nervous," he explains two days later, relaxing at his studio in Nashville. Though he's been entertaining crowds for a quarter-century, it's been 14 years since he last toured. And despite occasional concerts and a string of acoustic shows in Las Vegas on weekends, he's still getting his road legs back. Pulling off a comeback after so long away had him "scared to death," he admits. "What if nobody shows up?"

Fortunately, that's one thing the 53-year-old country superstar doesn't have to worry about. His world tour with wife Trisha Yearwood, 50, continues to break ticket-sale records in cities across the U.S.; his ninth studio album, Man Against Machine, has been certified platinum; and he's up for what could likely be his seventh Entertainer of the Year Award at the Academy of Country Music Awards April 19. The singer also still holds the record as the bestselling solo artist in history, besting even Elvis.

Brooks admits he's been overjoyed at fan response to his comeback, but he is also confident he made the right choice back in 2000 when he decided to retire and focus on being a full-time father to Taylor, August and Allie, his daughters from his first marriage, to Sandy Mahl. "People said, 'How could you walk away from music?'" Brooks says. "But being a dad—there's nothing that can touch that." At the time, much of Brooks's life was in turmoil. His mom, Colleen, had recently died from cancer, his marriage to Mahl, his college sweetheart, was ending, and his oldest daughter was mimicking her nannies' accents, making the singer realize "that someone else was raising her," he recalls. "Everything was telling me I need to be there for my children."

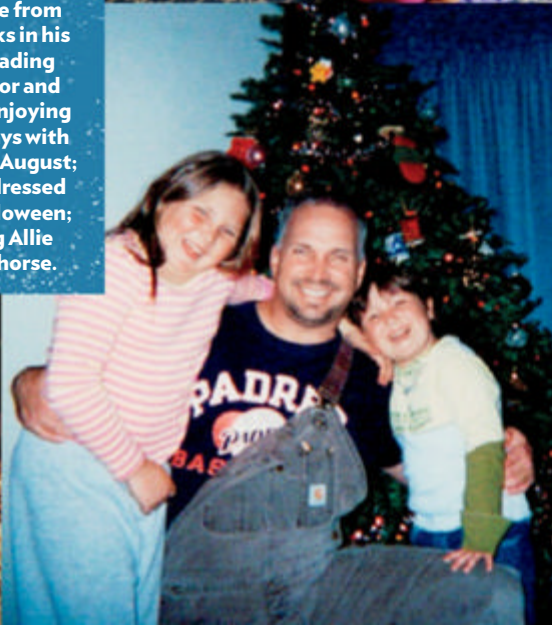

Not that stepping away was easy. When Brooks filed for divorce from Mahl, he moved into a one-bathroom bunkhouse on his ranch in Oklahoma. The two shared custody of their daughters, exchanging them every day at 6 p.m. so the girls didn't go 24 hours without seeing both parents. But being alone with his daughters for the first time without any nannies made Brooks feel "lost as last year's Easter egg," he says. "I'd just stare at them. I knew their sweet faces and their dispositions. But I didn't know who they were."

A strict disciplinarian, Brooks had plenty of rules—like no Facebook until you were 18—but life under his roof was also filled with lots of fun. When one of the girls had trouble with math, he taught them all how to play penny-ante poker. "Just so they could count," he explains. And despite his limited culinary skills—dinners tended to be mostly macaroni and cheese and chicken strips—he won them over that first summer with his willingness to be silly. One night during a spaghetti dinner, Brooks instructed his daughters to toss their forks behind them and eat without using their hands.

'I told my girls, "Don't let the world decide who you are. You decide who you are"'

Clockwise from top: Brooks in his truck; reading with Taylor and August; enjoying the holidays with Taylor and August; the girls dressed up for Halloween; teaching Allie to ride a horse.

GARTH'S GUIDE TO RAISING DAUGHTERS

- Always be on call
"Because sure enough, something will happen: Somebody isn't feeling good, or somebody left their cheerleading bloomers."
- Let them fail
"You can't succeed if you don't know what losing is. Taylor played soccer and once got her ass handed to her, and I've never, ever been more proud to be her dad."
- Put them to work
His daughters have all waited tables, since "once you've figured out how to wait on people and clean toilets, it makes you very mindful of how you treat the people who are serving you."
- Test their dates right away
"If a young man can swallow his pride to let her drive [on the first date], that's cool. And if something goes wrong, she can come home."
- Always set consequences
"We had an agreement that if their grades dropped, their cell phones got taken away."

HOME ON THE ROAD

1. "This is not work," says Brooks (in Nashville) of his return to music. "I just love to see people having a good time."

2. Sharing an intimate kiss with Yearwood onstage, Brooks says his wife "is the only person on the planet that could break me into a billion pieces."

3. Touring together "is fun," Brooks says. "She says her favorite thing about me is I make her laugh. She's my guilty pleasure. I just can't believe she's with me."

'Writing music makes me breathe. A blank page makes me hungry to fill it'

"I took the oldest one's head and just put it right down [into the plate]," he says, laughing. "They ate like dogs and had the best time." The tradition would serve as a handy icebreaker when Brooks and Yearwood began dating. During her first meal with the brood, "Taylor reached over, took Trisha's head, and before I knew it, bam!" says Brooks. "The whole table went silent. We were like, 'Oh crap.' Yearwood was fantastic, though. She came up with a noodle across her forehead and popped little Auggie's head right down. It was on from there!" (The couple married at the ranch in 2005.)

Brooks flourished as his life centered on packing school lunches (he would tuck handwritten notes in each one), doing chores at the ranch and shuttling between the girls' after-school activities. "You start being a part of the community," he says. "The dads across the soccer field looked at me as a dad just like them. And I was very grateful."

And like those dads, Brooks also learned to roll with the challenges of parenthood. Children, he says, "are the greatest joy and the greatest heartache you'll ever have. The saying is, as long as your babies are healthy, everything else you can deal with. If they have D's, if they flunk, you deal with it. You can introduce them to the Lord, teach them manners, teach them to believe in themselves, but the truth is, they're going to be who they're going to be."

With all the girls now out of the house—Taylor, 22, and August, 20, who has a 21-month-old daughter, Karalynn (K for short), are both still in Oklahoma taking college classes, while Allie, 18, is attending college in Nashville—Brooks admits he's suffering a bit from empty-nest syndrome. "I am in the period now where I think I pray more than I ever have in my life," he says. "Because for some reason when they were under my roof, I felt like I might have had some control, you know?"

His relationship with Yearwood has been his saving grace. "Thank God I'm with the love of my life," he says. "That's why I know I'm right where I'm supposed to be." The pair are selling their house in Oklahoma and building a new one in Nashville, both to ease their return to the music business and to be near Allie. "We just thought, 'Well, this is a way we kind of don't have to let go of her,'" the singer says. Plus, he adds, "I promised my bride that I would work like hell to be at home as much as we're on the road." On those days off he's happiest hanging out in his sweats with Dr. Pepper in his fridge and eating "anything Miss Yearwood makes. With mashed potatoes. And pizza." Looking ahead, he has a simple hope for the future: "I want my children to be proud that I'm their father." Oh, and there's that little granddaughter he's looking forward to spending time with. "Right now I've been kind of staying away, because Baby K doesn't really get anything," he says. "But the second that little girl starts understanding what's going on around her, that's when that pony shows up on the front porch, a real live one," he says, laughing. "Me and her are going to be peas and carrots!" ●

KATE'S RULES FOR BEING A MOM!

WITH HER SECOND BABY DUE ANY DAY, THE PRINCESS MOM IS PLANNING A LONGER MATERNITY LEAVE TO NEST WITH HER NEWBORN (AND BIG BROTHER GEORGE). HERE'S HOW KATE PUTS HER OWN STAMP ON BEING A ROYAL PARENT

By SIMON PERRY

WHEN THEY TOOK George on a royal tour Down Under a year ago, Kate, 33, and William, 32, got special permission from the Queen for both heirs to fly on the same plane. In putting her family's needs ahead of protocol, Kate followed in the footsteps of that original royal rebel, Princess Diana. Di broke with the separate-planes tradition 32 years ago so she and Charles could fly with the infant William for their tour of New Zealand and Australia. "Diana," says Di's former bodyguard Ken Wharfe, "broke the mold and stood her ground."

William has made his wife happy, friends say, by taking a shift job flying air ambulances (inset) near Anmer Hall, their country home in Norfolk. "It's why he took the job," a friend tells PEOPLE. "They're going to make it as much of a base as it can be." For her part, Kate plans to take more maternity leave this time around. "She felt she came back too soon last time," says a royal source of the princess, who stepped out for an official engagement with Will less than eight weeks after George was born. "She wants to have that [family] time and enjoy it."

Will (with George last year) wants a "normal family life for as long as he can," says a friend.

MORE MIDDLETON, LESS WINDSOR

FLOUTING THE ROYAL TRADITION of keeping in-laws out of the spotlight, Kate has kept her parents, Carole and Mike, a warmly visible part of her family's life. That's just fine with William, who has been heard calling Mike "Dad" and, says his biographer Penny Junor, "enjoys the relaxed nature of their life because it is normal. William is hugely fond of them. [The Middletons] are going to be part of the [new] baby's life—probably much more so than the royal family."

NO TEAM of NANNIES

Will and Kate have advertised for a housekeeper (“discretion and loyalty is paramount”) for 10-bedroom Anmer Hall. But they’re not going to expand their child-care staff beyond ace nanny Maria Borrallo, who will help care for the newborn while also minding 21-month-old George. “They are happy with that arrangement,” a source close to the couple tells PEOPLE. As with George, they will likely bring aboard a short-term baby nurse right after the birth, another source says.

THEN

Prince William, at 10 months, is carried by Barbara Barnes (in '83), one of a few nannies he had during his childhood. After Harry came along, Charles and Di hired a nanny for the spare.

NOW

Maria Borrallo (carrying George in '14) will have her work cut out for her dividing her attention between George and his new sib, maternity expert Sarah Dixon says. “He might not like it,” Dixon says. “But George will adjust.”

KEEP THEM GUESSING

Of 31 outfits PEOPLE counted that Kate wore during her pregnancy, it's boyish colors that have won out, by 19 to 12. Yet pinks, both soft pastel and strong cerise, have been prominent of late. What does it all mean? “I think she probably really wants a girl,” says Majesty magazine's Ingrid Seward. “Of course, we all want a girl.”

A TROUBLED HEIR

BILLIONAIRE FAMILY TRAGEDY

THE GETTY CURSE STRIKES AGAIN

Born into one of America's wealthiest families, Andrew Getty could afford to indulge his passions: He wanted to make gory horror movies. He wanted to write the world's longest palindrome (a phrase that reads the same forward and backward). He wanted to buy a flying car like one he had seen on YouTube. And he wanted to visit Costa Rica this month. Says his friend Alisha Lucero: "We were talking about April to see the waterfalls."

But like much in Getty's peculiar life, those plans would go unfulfilled. On March 31 the 47-year-old grandson of oil tycoon J. Paul Getty was found dead, bleeding in the bathroom hallway of his Hollywood Hills mansion. His body was discovered by an ex-girlfriend, Lanessa DeJonge, against whom Getty had sought a restraining order two weeks earlier, claiming that DeJonge refused to leave his house. But police say they do not believe foul play was involved in Getty's death, and L.A. county coroner's assistant chief Ed Winter told PEOPLE the cause was "probably gastrointestinal bleeding." Getty had problems with drugs in the past, according to sources, and suffered from dangerously high blood pressure. Winter said that prescription drugs were found at the scene but he believed Getty had been sober “for some time.”

The sad end is the latest in a long series of tragedies to befall the legendary Getty family, which built its multibillion-dollar dynasty on oil-field fortunes (see sidebar). For Andrew, that wealth “attracted people that shouldn’t be around,” says his friend Elan Morrison. A rotating group of houseguests shared room in his sprawling home with his collection of puppets, skulls and even the skeleton of a prehistoric bird. “He was addicted to troubled women,” says another friend, Noelle Leanne. “He had this hero thing, so he would always try to help people. He was a playboy who had a big heart.”

But he was haunted by his family’s demons. He talked to friends about his cousin John Paul Getty III’s kidnapping and death threats he said his family had gotten. “He was paranoid and afraid of being alone,” Leanne says. Less business-focused than his forebears, he pursued a career as a director, sinking $6 million into a horror film, The Storyteller, that went unreleased. Behind closed doors, “he had a fetish for women’s clothing,” says Leanne. He bought closets full of garments online and asked female guests to model them for him. In 2002 his then-girlfriend Tara Kersch painted a dark picture of Getty in a request for a restraining order, alleging that he was addicted to crystal meth and had threatened to kill her. He “ate and drank whatever the hell he wanted,” says Leanne. “He didn’t go out much. He would bring the party home. It was a purely indulgent lifestyle.”

And yet “he wasn’t just this oil tycoon baby,” says Morrison. “He saw people who were down and wanted to fix them. I know he wanted his own family. I think he never found what he was looking for.”

A Dynasty’s Scandals & Tragedies

J. PAUL GETTY

Once known as the world’s richest private citizen, he made his fortune in the oil business.

Notorious as a miser and philanderer, he married and divorced five women and even installed a pay phone in his mansion. He died in 1976.

GEORGE FRANKLIN GETTY

J. Paul’s oldest son died of a lethal mix of drugs and alcohol—a probable suicide—in 1973.

SIR JOHN PAUL GETTY JR.

J. Paul’s jet-setting son and his wife, model Talitha Pol, posed for this 1969 photo in Morocco. Pol died in 1971 of a heroin overdose, and Getty Jr. battled addiction and depression before his 2003 death.

JOHN PAUL GETTY III

When he was kidnapped as a teen by Italian gangsters, his grandpa J. Paul refused to pay ransom until his captors cut off his ear and put it in the mail. A 1981 drug overdose left him a quadriplegic. He died in 2011.

AILEEN GETTY

Once wed to Elizabeth Taylor’s son Christopher Wilding (above), J. Paul’s granddaughter struggled with addiction and contracted HIV but has been sober nine years. She founded charities Gettlove, aiding the homeless, and the Aileen Getty Foundation, for community and environmental causes.

GORDON GETTY

Andrew’s philanthropist dad weathered scandal in 1999 when it was revealed he had three kids out of wedlock, but he stayed married to wife Ann.

BALTHAZAR GETTY

J. Paul’s actor great-grandson separated from his wife, Rosetta, after an affair with actress Sienna Miller in 2008, but the pair later reconciled.

FRANKEL

My Disastrous Love Life

SHE'S WRITTEN A BOOK ABOUT HER RELATIONSHIP PROBLEMS—AND HER DIVORCE DRAMA CONTINUES—BUT THE REALITY STAR SAYS SHE IS LEARNING FROM HER MISTAKES
BY ELIZABETH McNEIL

Showing a visitor around her new SoHo apartment, Bethenny Frankel points out the crystal chandeliers, a red leather settee and the all-pink little girl's bedroom. "I have a fireplace and a terrace," she says. "And that's my daughter's art on the wall. Our first night here, we just snuggled. I've wanted this so badly I can't even tell you."

For Frankel, 44, her new home represents a peaceful space amid her much-documented battles with husband Jason Hoppy. The pair, whose arguments over money, ambition and compatibility were highlighted on Frankel's Bravo show Bethenny

Ever After, split in 2012.

Though they continue to fight in court over her fortune and their Tribeca apartment, they've resolved their custody battle over their daughter Bryn, 4, and have agreed to co-parent her. More bright spots for Frankel: She's returned to The Real Housewives of New York City, which she left in 2010, and—shrewd as ever about marketing her mishaps—she has written a new book, I Suck at Relationships So You Don't Have To (see box). “Someone said to me, ‘What the hell do you know about relationships? Look at your past,’” says Frankel, whose first marriage, to Peter Sussman in 1996, lasted just eight months. “It’s true, I suck at relationships. It’s like I see the island. But I have a difficult time swimming there.”

Indeed, despite the playfully titled memoir and the new apartment (purchased after she lived out of hotels and corporate apartments for two years while Hoppy stayed in their home), Frankel says it’s hard for her to be completely happy without love. “Everybody would think all I ever wanted was success. I think the success I created was probably like a false sense of love, being on television and connecting with an audience. But if anybody ever asked me what I wanted more, it’s love.”

The contrast between her professional success, as the founder of the multimillion-dollar Skinnygirl empire, and her personal failures is her book’s constant theme. “I learn more from my mistakes than my successes,” she says, choosing

Getting to the Heart of It

Here are a few of the things I’ve done wrong: I play games. I get afraid. I run. I shut down. I fall in love with the wrong men. I’ve settled for less than I deserve. I’ve been with men who made a lot of money and supported me and was unable to handle that. I’ve been with men who had no money and turned out to be gold diggers. Do I choose poorly or have I really not met the right person yet? It’s no secret I’m going through a very negative and public and nasty divorce. I know I’ll eventually learn why I have gone through this personal hell. There is always a lesson. When my relationship fell apart, I beat myself up. How could I have been so stupid? I kept going back over it, rehashing all the decisions that seemed right at the time. I really don’t want to screw it up again. The upside is that I’ve learned a lot about what makes a poor choice. Despite all my relationship disasters, I remain an optimist. I know that one of these days, I’m going to get it right.

her words carefully. (She's legally bound not to speak specifically about Hoppy or the divorce.) "As I say in the book, you think you have someone pegged and you feel blindsided and you are afraid that you'll do it again, so you don't even want to get into anything because you're scared."

Single once again (she recently broke up with her boyfriend of over one year, financier Michael Cerussi III), Frankel says she's not "overly motivated" to date again. "Someone said to me recently, 'We are pricing ourselves out of the market,'" she says. "I'm okay with a money gap, but men need to feel in control—there's nothing more emasculating than a woman pulling out her credit card. I don't care how women's lib we are."

She hates blind dates—"my idea of hell. I don't like small talk; I like big talk"—and she's not a fan of Tinder. "I don't have any apps," she says. "I'm averse to online dating, but then again I suck at relationships, so maybe I should try it."

But at least she's clear about what she's looking for. "I won't legally marry again," she says. "I'm not saying I wouldn't stand on a beach and commit to somebody, I just don't want to be in a contract with someone I love. I want a partner. Someone who is not threatened and not emasculated and not with me for the wrong reasons." And, she adds, "I would not want to date anyone who would want to be on a reality TV show. You have to date someone who has their own identity. Someone's identity can't be you."

For now she's focusing on beach time, her book tour and spending time with Bryn. "It feels good to have my daughter and know she's the most important thing," she says. "I'm not missing one minute that I don't have to."

Then maybe someday, finally, Mr. Right will come along. "I self-deprecate, but I don't actually think I'm a disaster at relationships," she says. "You just have to know how to handle me. I'm complicated." ●

The classic looks. The shirtless workouts. The echo of his dad's iconic manliness. Scott Eastwood is on his way to becoming a Hollywood heartthrob—but he's pretty satisfied with life's simple pleasures. "I don't need a lot to be happy," he says, pulling off his Ray-Bans to reveal piercing baby blues. "The outdoors, California sun and good friends." His ideal weekend? "Go down to Rosarito with buddies and rent a house on the beach. Bring surfboards, fishing gear, Corona and pretty girls."

Charmingly sincere but with a sense of humor about being a sex symbol, Clint Eastwood's 29-year-old son is out to prove he's not just cashing in on his

Among other plum upcoming roles, he costars in Oliver Stone’s Edward Snowden biopic and signed on to the all-star cast of the supervillain film Suicide Squad. “I like manly movies,” he says, “but sprinkled in with comedy and movies that really touch people.” His role models include Leonardo DiCaprio and George Clooney for their “smart choices.” But his ultimate inspiration is close to home: “My father is my No. 1 biggest hero.” ●

His Hollywood Legacy

Born in Monterey, Calif., to his Oscar-winning father, Clint, now 84 (the Hollywood legend has seven kids), and flight attendant Jacelyn Reeves, Eastwood spent his childhood being “dragged around to movie sets,” he recalls, and later acted in his dad’s Gran Torino and Flags of Our Fathers. Jillette and his family hang by the Goldfish-cracker-shaped pond (also home to 12 turtles) in Las Vegas.

KITCHEN AREA The floor features a police outline of Jillette's partner, Teller, while the adjacent rotunda includes an exact replica of a booth from his favorite local coffee shop.

Penn Jillette's sprawling Las Vegas home was just a simple A-frame when he purchased it 20 years ago. "It's a 2,000-sq.-ft. house with a 10,000-sq.-ft. addition," says the talkative half of magician duo Penn & Teller, who customized the space for his 6'7" frame with extra-high counters and windows. "I built the ultimate bachelor pad—hidden rooms, fire poles." Then, once he met his wife, Emily, now 49, and began preparing for kids Moxie Crime-Fighter, 9, and Zolten Penn, 8, he expanded again. "My wife and I got married to have children—we were both just waiting to find the right person," says the 60-year-old SyFy Wizard Wars judge. "We talked to people about making the house child-friendly, but it was impossible. So we just built on another house." Now the expansive, candy-colored complex—designed by L.A.-based architect Colin Summers—includes a playroom, an office, a much-used guesthouse and a home theater that doubles as a band room (where he once jammed with Lou Reed). "The house is big, stupid and nutty," he says. "What's a more perfect description of me?"

The home is less than 20 minutes from the Rio casino—where Jillette and his partner, Teller (a.k.a. Raymond Joseph Teller), have the longest-running headline act in Vegas. But the illusionist admits that his dream home is not close to the kids' schools, and they don't have nearby neighbors for easy playdates. Since being diagnosed with high blood pressure last that selling this “eccentric” passion project will be no easy trick. The next place will probably be “much more traditional,” he concedes. “Gated communities are planned for families. This is for a crazy person living alone in the desert.” —GABRIELLE OLYA

"The key is that everything has to be able to get thrown up on or crayoned," NCIS's Michael Weatherly says of his pretense-free decorating philosophy. With two dogs and two young kids—Olivia, 3, and Liam, 17 months—"we're not precious about stuff." The CBS star, 46, and his wife, Bojana Jankovic, a physician, 34, moved into their four-bedroom, 4,000-sq.-ft. Hollywood home (designed by noted L.A. architect Fred Smathers) shortly after their daughter was born. The major selling point? "It feels warm," he says. "Not formal, but it can dress up nice." One of his favorite spaces is the airy living room, which features "impossibly comfortable, marshmallow-like" seating clustered in a "social circle." And despite all the windows, "it's not a place that's about the view," says the actor. "It's not showy in that way. It's about having family and friends together." —GABRIELLE OLYA

“UPSTAIRS IS HOMEY. DOWNSTAIRS IS FOR ENTERTAINMENT—GAME ROOM, MOVIE THEATER, BAR”

Shad “Bow Wow” MOSS & Erica MENA

THE CSI: CYBER STAR AND HIS FIANCEE UNWIND IN THEIR REFINED ATLANTA HOME

When Bow Wow—who goes by his given name, Shad Moss, as the star of CBS’s new hit CSI: Cyber—first bought this eight-bedroom mansion in suburban Atlanta around 2004, “I had murals of Tupac and Biggie on my walls,” he says. But then his mom, Teresa Caldwell, who also lives there, seized control of the design. “She painted over them!” says Moss, 28. “But it’s all good. She knows what she’s doing.”

They added a pool and cultivated what Moss describes as a “homey, modern” vibe. As for living with his mother, he says, “I’ve had full-blown house parties downstairs, and she never heard a thing.” The sheer size of the house came in handy when his fiancée, Erica Mena, of VH1’s Love & Hip Hop, moved in last December. “Everything was perfect,” says Mena, 27. “All I had to do was place my shoes where I wanted them and I was home.” —EMILY STROHM

1. SITTING AREA

“The energy of the house is so important,” says Moss’s mom.

“I wanted the feel to be a mix of Moroccan and modern.”

2. LIVING ROOM

“This is where we kick our feet up,” says Mena. “He plays video games or I watch Scandal.”

Jared PADALECKI

'IT FEELS LIKE I'M A PART OF NATURE,' SAYS THE SUPERNATURAL STAR OF HIS RUSTIC AUSTIN, TEXAS, HOME

"My dream as a child was literally to grow up and live in Austin, as silly as that sounds," says Jared Padalecki, who spent his childhood 80 miles away in San Antonio. So when he met his actress wife, Genevieve, 34, on the Vancouver set of the CW's Supernatural, Padalecki, 32, proposed relocating. "We came and visited one summer, and she's like, 'Austin is cool!'" So they snapped up a 10,600-sq.-ft. lodge and guesthouse filled with dark wood. "I love the feeling of an old cabin lodge," he says. "We bought the place in 2012 and have been making it our own ever since." While the main house is being remodeled, the family—including sons Thomas, 3, and Shepherd, 1—are bunking in the two-bedroom guesthouse, equipped with an exercise room, home theater and wine cellar. But the actor's favorite spot is his upstairs office [bottom right]. "When I come here, I pour myself a little bourbon and grab my guitar," he says. "I'm free of my worldly responsibilities." —ANA CALDERONE with James Hibberd

“I SURROUND MYSELF WITH THINGS THAT MAKE ME HAPPY”

1. WINE CELLAR

"This has been a 10-year passion project," says Padalecki of the 1,000-bottle wine collection he stores in the spacious cellar. "I don't think of wine as an art, it's a craft."

2. HOME OFFICE

"This is my first stop when I get home," he says of the room scattered with memorabilia (like his four People's Choice Awards). "When I'm not working, I want to be relaxed."

My Life Now

HILARY
DUFF

THE FORMER TWEEN QUEEN GETS GROWN-UP BUZZ FOR HER TV COMEDY. BUT HER FAVORITE COSTAR IS HER 3-YEAR-OLD SON

BY AILI NAHAS

Hilary Duff was ready to mix it up. Last month she took stock of her signature blonde locks and temporarily dyed them a brilliant turquoise. “I was a little scared at first,” Duff says, relaxing on the couch in her Beverly Hills home. “But I just wanted to have a little fun.” And after a roller-coaster year that saw her land a new sitcom, record a new album, end her marriage to hockey player Mike Comrie and focus on raising their son Luca, 3, she’s earned it. “I went through my highs and lows,” she says of the big shifts in her life, “but at the end of the day, I wouldn’t change anything. I feel happy. And I’m excited about everything I have.”

More than 10 years after Lizzie McGuire, the Disney show that rocketed her to tween stardom, went off the air, Duff is back on TV in TV Land’s Younger. This time the actress plays the sassy sidekick to Broadway star Sutton Foster, who stars as a 40-year-old mom posing as a twenty-something to get ahead in a youth-obsessed world. “It’s edgy,” says Duff. “And it’s very fun to play a girl who has this independent life and is able to make mistakes freely, choices I would

From Disney to Daring

1. "People haven't seen me like this before," says Duff of her role on Younger. "I have a few pretty naughty moments."
2. "I've always worked like an adult," says Duff of her days on Lizzie McGuire. "I feel very accomplished, but I want to do much more."

never make because the world is always watching." Though the Houston native says her life is "more normal than people think," she's had a show-business career since middle school, and that makes it hard to relate to typical millennials. "I've felt older than I am for a really long time," says Duff. "A lot of responsibility came my way early." Foster agrees: "Hilary is the most mature 27-year-old I've ever known. She doesn't get caught up in celebrity noise."

Duff was just 22 when she wed Comrie; the pair welcomed Luca less than two years later. "Maybe I got married too young," she says. "But I have always had a strong sense of who I am and what I'm capable of." When the relationship didn't work out, she found a way forward. Duff and Comrie announced their split in January 2014 (see box) but didn't file for divorce until a year later. "We gave it time to settle because we had a little guy involved, and then we decided, 'Okay, it's been a year. Let's call it.'" Despite the emotional upheaval (Duff, who co-parents with Comrie, admits it's a strange shift to "cook dinner just for me and a 3-year-old"), the star says she's "just fine." Says Duff, "I'm not the person to sit around and have a really bad day. I'm not saying I've never sat around and cried, but I'd rather get outside in the sunshine."

'Fighting for what makes you happy is really important in life'

Staying positive is part of how she's survived. Growing up in Hollywood, Duff stayed away from the clubbing and drugging that derailed many of her peers. But she didn't avoid all of fame's pitfalls. By her late teens Duff was earning a reported $2 million for films like A Cinderella Story, but offscreen she became "obsessed" with her body image. "I was too thin," she says now. "That was not a healthy place for me. I remember my hands would cramp because I wasn't getting enough nutrients." Now that she's a mother, Duff embraces her natural frame—flaws and all. "My body is never going to be what it was," she says of adapting to a post-baby physique. "I have stretch marks, my boobs are different, but I look in the mirror and I'm like, 'This is what I got.' I feel fit and strong."

Stamina comes in handy with a toddler. "We spent the weekend building Lego structures," Duff says. "There had to be 900 little pieces. I wanted to pull my hair out!" As for the future, she says she's "open" to dating and hopes for more kids. But whatever happens, she's learned to handle curveballs. "You can have a vision for how you want things to go," she says. "But it's the bumps in the road that make you stronger." ●

Inside the Split

"It wasn't just 'boom,' it happened," says Duff of her decision to separate from Mike Comrie, her husband of over three years, in 2014. "It was just us slowly realizing we weren't where we used to be." Duff calls reconciliation buzz, sparked when the pair were often photographed together post-separation, "annoying." Says Duff: "Luca is our No. 1 priority—we made a promise to raise him together. I'm really proud of how we handled it." And the star looks back on her marriage with fondness. "We wrap a lot of respect around it," Duff says. "And a bow on top with the memories we had together."

NOVEMBER 2007

Collins, who first hit the scene with nearly waist-length hair, once said, "I want my hair to look as natural as possible."

NOVEMBER 2009

She dyed her hair copper for her role in Priest, later telling PEOPLE she "felt a little feistier" when she had the fiery shade.

JUNE 2010

Back to brown at the MTV Movie Awards, Collins opted for loose waves. "I like the beachy look," she has said.

SEPTEMBER 2011

The inspiration behind the star's faux fringe? Audrey Hepburn, says Roszak. "That was a really fun look."

APRIL 2012

She went dark to play Snow White in Mirror Mirror, and stayed true to the character's hue while promoting the movie.

"IT'S SUCH A FREEING EXPERIENCE," ROSZAK SAYS OF GOING SHORTER.

MARCH 2015

Once Roszak knew Collins wanted a pixie, she sought inspiration from 1990s models "like Linda Evangelista." To get Collins's texture and volume, Roszak used L'Oréal Paris Advanced Hairstyle Boost It High Lift Creation Spray.

FEBRUARY 2013

Chopping off several inches "just felt right" says Roszak, who created this "rock and roll" look. "We wanted something really cool."

OCTOBER 2013

"When Lily has an idea and she's ready to do it, she knows it's the right decision," says Roszak of this "chic" shoulder-grazing length.

DECEMBER 2014

Rozsak tucked Collins's bob under for a Love, Rosie premiere. "We were considering going shorter, so this was a fun way to experiment."

If you own or owned property with windows made by MI Windows, you may qualify for benefits from a class action settlement.

File an online claim now at www.MIWDTapeGlazedWindowSettlement.com

Para una notificación en Español, llamar o visitar nuestro website.

A proposed Settlement has been reached with MI Windows and Doors, LLC ("MIWD") relating to tape glazed windows manufactured by MIWD between July 1, 2000 and March 31, 2010. The lawsuit alleged water leakage and resulting damage to Class Members' windows and property. MIWD denies the allegations and there has been no determination of wrongdoing by the Court.

Who is included?

The Settlement includes both homeowners and contractors who own or owned a home or other structure with the included MIWD windows. A complete list of the windows covered by the Settlement can be viewed at www.MIWDTapeGlazedWindowSettlement.com. The website has photographs and detailed instructions on how to identify if your windows are part of the Settlement.

What does the Settlement provide?

If you have windows that are included in the Settlement, you may be able to make a claim for money, repair service or other benefits. The amount you may make a claim for will depend on a number of factors, including (1) the number of affected windows, (2) whether water leaked, causing a visible residue line, water staining or additional property damage, and (3) whether you previously paid money for certain repairs. Class Members may be able to receive monetary compensation plus replacement window sashes and repairs. The Settlement creates several categories of benefits. Visit the website for detailed information.

How do I make a Claim?

You can file an online claim now at the website. You can also download a paper Claim Form at the website or request one by calling the toll-free number below. There are multiple claim categories with different deadlines. The earliest deadline is October 26, 2015.

Your other options.

If you do not want to be legally bound by the Settlement, you must exclude yourself from the Class by May 28, 2015, or you will not be able to sue MIWD about the legal claims the Settlement resolves, ever again. If you exclude yourself, you cannot get money or other benefits from the Settlement. If you stay in the Class, you may object to it by June 1, 2015. The detailed notice available on the website explains how to exclude yourself or object.

The Court will hold a hearing, on June 30, 2015, to consider whether to approve the Settlement, and a request by Class Counsel for attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses of no more than $9,045,000 and incentive awards for the Class Representatives of $5,000. You or your own lawyer, if you have one, may ask to appear and speak at the hearing at your own cost, but you do not have to.

LIFE WITH CHARLIE
The actress in 1966 with her father, ventriloquist Edgar Bergen, and the dummy she hated. "It's like, 'If I just squeeze a little harder...'" Bergen says.

MY LIFE in PICTURES

Candice Bergen

THE FORMER MURPHY BROWN STAR OPENS UP ABOUT LOVE, FAME, BEAUTY—AND WHY SHE'S NO DIETER BY KIM HUBBARD

Like her alter ego in the hit '90s sitcom Murphy Brown, Candice Bergen has a quick wit and a tart tongue. Reminiscing over photos at her daughter's Manhattan home, the actress stops on a picture of Charlie McCarthy, her ventriloquist dad's famous dummy. "Charlie was like a god in our house," she says. "As a sibling rivalry it has no parallels. Now he's in the Smithsonian." Does she ever go to see him? Bergen raises an eyebrow. "No!" she replies. "Do I seem insane?"

What she seems is remarkably levelheaded. Raised among Hollywood royalty and renowned for her Nordic beauty, she won roles in dramatic classics like Carnal Knowledge before finding her niche as a comic actress (she's hosted SNL five times). "My dad said beautiful women commit suicide and I should develop my interests," she says. Now 68, she talks freely about plastic surgery ("I'm clearly in need, but I just don't care enough") and the 30-lb. weight gain she cops to in her new memoir A Fine Romance ("I refuse to deprive myself"). Still acting occasionally, she finds joy in life with second husband Marshall Rose, 78, a real estate developer; in Chloe, 29, the daughter she had with her first husband, director Louis Malle; and in her rich store of memories. "I'm the only one that has such weird family photos," she says, rolling her eyes at another Charlie McCarthy shot. "I take great pride in that."

BLONDE PERFECTION

She was raised to have “a big investment in no vanity,” says Bergen (modeling in 1967). Still, she felt the difference in men’s reactions as she hit middle age: “People were always lovely to me, but suddenly they were . . . polite. You adjust.”

HOLLYWOOD ROOTS

“I had a mostly solitary childhood. We lived on top of a mountain, and there were no kids up there,” says Bergen (fifth from left, next to Liza Minnelli).

“This was my birthday party. We were having a dog performance, but we didn’t have those every day!”

MURPHY MEETS JFK

The day JFK Jr. filmed a spot on Murphy Brown, “I mean, secretaries from miles away were beating the door down,” Bergen says. “You could see it just never quit. But he was lovely.”

THE LOUIS YEARS

“I think he found me sort of like living with the light,” says Bergen (at her 1980 wedding to Louis Malle on his French estate). “Even though I’m half Swedish and not known for my lightness.”

FROM TOP: CONDE NAST ARCHIVE/CORBIS; COURTESY CANDICE BERGEN; MARY ELLEN MARK; EVERETT

FAMILY TIME

Malle, who died in 1995, “was very brilliant,” says Bergen (with him and their daughter Chloe on Easter). “He was also tortured, but when he was charming, there was nobody like him. The first few years of our marriage were idyllic.”

GIRLS' DAY OUT

Bergen remains close friends with actress Ali MacGraw (center, with her and agent Sue Mengers). “Ali didn’t start doing movies until she was 30, and she was the only woman ever to be absolutely open about her age. I thought that was fantastic.”

DEVOTED MOM

Initially “beyond ambivalent” about motherhood, Bergen says she now wishes she had more kids. But Chloe (in 1999) “has such a big personality that she makes up for it.”

CARNAL PALS

“Jack is fantastically unique,” says Bergen of her Carnal Knowledge costar (on-set in 1970). “Did we kiss in that movie? Of course I would remember kissing Jack Nicholson, but so much has fallen away.”

SECOND CHANCE

Bergen calls husband Marshall Rose (whom she married in 2000) “a guy from Brooklyn who is innately elegant and a very attentive husband. Plenty of other women were trying to trap him when we met.”

This memoir is Bergen’s second. “I do have some stories,” she says. “And many I couldn’t tell!”

One Last Thing

Ryan Reynolds

The new dad, 38, costars with Helen Mirren in the film Woman in Gold

Last time someone called me sexy

This morning my wife [Blake Lively], when I was leaving, said, "You look sexy." I left the house a little taller.

Last time I cried

My baby [daughter James, 3 months] being born. I was inconsolable. I was moved to instant sprinklerhead.

Last home-improvement chore I did

There was an ice dam on my roof. So I got up there with some calcium chloride and thawed it out. Because it was leaking into the house.

Last time I rocked out

"These Dreams" by Heart. I was lip-synching ferociously in the car the other day. And a busload of kids were looking at me, laughing. Not the song you want to get caught rocking out to.

Last good deed I did

It's kind of a cliché, but I was walking in Santa Monica and a blind woman was asking for help to cross the street. She was probably 75. Everyone just kept walking past her. I kind of caught myself, "What are you doing? Go over there and help!" So I walked her across the street. And she kind of commandeered me for the next hour. She was very sweet.
